DESIGN/BUILD REVIEW

VOLUME 19, ISSUE 2

BUILT-IN ORGANIZATION FOR TECHNOLOGY DEVICES

Thinking about building or remodeling? Consider built-in organization for your technology devices. True, technology storage and integration conversations may not be as exhilarating as trips to the tile showrooms. However, we're certain that once your remodel or new build is complete, you'll be glad to have devoted design time to some high-function organization for these devices that are relied on daily. In the "drop zone" (left and center above) we included a tilted drawer large enough to accommodate an iPad and several phones. Charging outlets are built in to the back of the drawer (no more searching for the cord) so that items can be charged immediately when walking through the door. The standing height desk (above left and center) also serves as a centralized family computer station. In the upper right family room photo is a wall-mounted docking station for the communal iPad (used to control music and movies). These built-in organization features will become the most used and, perhaps, most loved features in your newly remodeled/built home. We guarantee it. For more ideas on built-in organization, visit our website or contact DiGiacomo Homes when you're ready to begin discussing a design for your home remodel.

IN THE NEWS

DIGIACOMO HOMES FEATURED IN MIDWEST HOME!

DiGiacomo Homes' award winning Mid-Century Modern master bath is featured in the current issue of Midwest Home Magazine's Homebook. The bath took first place at the 2018 ASID (American Society of Interior Design) awards and also earned a Gold 2018 COTY (Contractor of the Year) award. We are proud to have been included in the magazine and featured along with nine of the state's other top residential designers. Check out the Homebook and visit our website for project information and photos.
